

Brindlewatch Support Policy Handbook

Version 2.0 | Effective 10 March 2025 Owner: Ignatius Varga-Lindqvist, Support Operations Manager | Next scheduled review: March 2026

1. About this handbook

One place for the rules agents reach for most often on a call: who we can talk to about an account, and when money goes back to a customer. Product how-to lives in the knowledge base. Where the handbook is silent, ask your Team Lead before you answer the customer.

2. Verifying callers

Ask the caller for 2 of the 4 identifiers: full name on the account, login e-mail address, billing postal code, last four digits of the payment card.

A caller who struggles may have up to three attempts. After the third, pass the call to your Team Lead.

Household members. A spouse, or another adult living at the billing address, who passes verification may be helped as if they were the account holder.

Password resets. Reset links normally go to the e-mail on file. If the caller cannot get into that mailbox, the agent may send the link to an alternate e-mail address the caller provides, once verification is passed. Note the address on the ticket.

3. Subscription refunds

Annual plans. Full refund if the customer asks within 45 days of the charge, on a first purchase or a renewal.

Monthly plans. On cancellation, refund the unused days of the current month pro rata.

Refunds reach the customer in 10 to 14 business days.

Approval. An agent may approve a refund of up to $250 without asking anyone. Larger amounts go to the Team Lead.

4. On the call

- Use the customer's name once at the start and once at the end; more than that sounds scripted.
- Do not leave a caller on hold for more than 2 minutes without coming back to them.
- Summarise what was agreed before closing, and tell the customer what happens next and when.
- If the customer is upset, let them finish before you answer. Do not match their volume.

5. Wrap-up notes

Every ticket needs three lines: what the customer wanted, what was done, what is still open. Write them so that a colleague who picks up the next contact does not have to ask the customer to repeat anything.
